The legal profession is a product of British rule and of the Judicial system introduced by these rulers in the land. Every honest, upright and competent judge is anxious to have all aspects of every case placed before him by litigants, or their agents and representatives, so that he may dispose of the case with complete impartiality after full consideration in meritorious manner. The parties to litigation generally need the assistance of qualified pleaders and advocates to place their case before the courts and it is of course recognized that a member of the bar in his conduct and arguments before a judge endeavours to place his client's case and points of views before the courts and does not in any way desire or endeavour to express or place before the court his own personal views about the merits of the case than under consideration.
