India is acclaimed to be the land of “DHARMA” replete with envious abundance and Natural Resource with long cherished culture and values. Despite this glorious historical background it is really regrettable that a section of the people in the Indian society have been suffering from social backwardness and economic exploitation. The founding fathers of Indian Constitution being eye witness to this sad state of Indian society, spared no efforts to bring about socio-economic justice to all sections of the people, still, curiously a section of such socially and economically cursed people are unable to derive the benefit of special protection provided to them under Indian Constitution.

The entire life of Raja Ram Mohan Roy was a non-stop and tireless quest for three distinct goals.

The first was social reform. The second was championing the cause of scientific education. This led to his founding the Indian press and sowing the first seeds of Indian journalism. The third goal was to make the people realise the true meaning of religion.

A tragic incident in Ram Mohan's Family left a deep impression on his mind. When his elder brother passed away, his wife was made to perform the sati (by burning herself on his funeral pyre). Ram Mohan was unable to save his sister-in-law who had been like a mother to him. But he vowed that he would not rest until this brutal custom was rooted out. It was by no means an easy task ! The majority of the educated class did not support him. The British Government's attitude in this matter was indifferent for they did not want to interfere with customary practices of the Hindus.
